Tommy and the Enchanted Garden

In a quaint little village, where houses wore hats of straw,
Lived a boy named Tommy, with a smile wide and raw.
He loved to wander in fields, under the bright sunlight,
But most of all, he adored a garden, ever so bright.

Tommy's garden was enchanted, with flowers in every hue,
Their petals danced with the wind, as if they knew.
The roses whispered secrets, the daisies sang a song,
And the tulips swayed gently, all day long.

One day, as Tommy roamed, he found a hidden gate,
It beckoned him with magic, promising a fate.
He pushed it open slowly, with curiosity unbound,
And what he found inside was beyond what he had found.

The garden stretched before him, with colors bright and bold,
The air was filled with laughter, the stories yet untold.
But as Tommy wandered deeper, he found a sight so rare,
A fairy sat upon a leaf, with fireflies in her hair.

"Welcome, dear Tommy," the fairy softly spoke,
"To the garden of wonders, where dreams are awoke."

She led him through the meadow, beneath the moonlit sky,
And Tommy's heart danced with joy, as the stars winked nearby.

They danced with the fireflies, they sang with the birds,
They chased the butterflies, without any words.
And as the night grew older, and the sky turned to dawn,
Tommy knew in his heart, that this was where he belonged.

For in the enchanted garden, where dreams come alive,
Tommy found his true self, with magic to survive.
And though he left the garden, his heart remained behind,
For in that wondrous place, true happiness he did find..

The end.
